THE DYNAMIC DUO FOR FIGHTING HEART DISEASE

with Dr. Gifford-Jones, MD (Winnipeg, Man.)

Years ago, sailors on long voyages died of scurvy, a severe form of vitamin C deficiency. But the ship's cats never died because they made their own vitamin C. Interviews with Dr. Linus Pauling convinced Gifford-Jones that many people still suffer from sub-clinical scurvy today. Coronary arteries, closest to the heart, receive the greatest pressure, and without enough vitamin C collagen weakens resulting in heart attack. Recent work by Dr. Sydney Bush shows that vitamin C plus lysine can reverse this process.
